MT. FUJI CLIMBING TOURS ON SALE NOW 2009 Climbing Season Preparations Underway

TOKYO, JAPAN – Leading Japan travel site JAPANiCAN.com today began accepting reservations for its 2-day climbing tours during the 2009 Mt. Fuji climbing season. The official climbing season will begin in July and last through the end of August, during which time over 300,000 climbers are expected to attempt to reach Fuji's peak. Last year JAPANiCAN's 2-day tours proved extremely popular, and the company hopes to increase this year's sales with a 10% lower price.

Climbers embarking on JAPANiCAN's 2-day tour will tackle Fuji's slopes in the early afternoon, setting out from Mt. Fuji's 5th station. The tour's price includes a rest at an 8th station lodge before beginning the final ascent and reaching Fuji's summit in time to see the sun rise over Japan. The tour also includes transportation by bus to and from Tokyo, and a chance to relax in a hot spring bath following the climb. The 2-day tour will cost JPY 28,800, and reservations are currently being accepted at JAPANiCAN's English site. For more details, visit http://www.japanican.com/climb_fuji.
